Problem Statement

Short-term academically sponsored global health care experiences, such as those offered at a mid-western state institution’s school of nursing, often occur in the absence of established goals for the population(s) being served and those students who serve as providers.

In the absence of clear expectations, suboptimal experiences for both groups may result.