SIUE has zero tolerance for sexual harassment

BY ALONA THOMPSON
NEWS STRINGER

Sexual harassment has been a huge issue in the '90s. From high-ranking politicians in government offices to young children on school playgrounds, it seems that no group is exempt from accusation.

Sexual harassment can also be found on college campuses.

The definition of sexual harassment differs from person to person but at Southern Illinois University Edwardsville, sexual harassment means an unwelcome sexual advance, request for a sexual favor or other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature.

SIUE is a zero-tolerance university when it comes to sexual harassment.

"Once a year we affirm our commitments and notify the community and university about the sexual harassment policy," said Paul Pitts, assistant to the chancellor for equal opportunity programs.

"Anything that is said or done that makes a person feel uncomfortable is an example of sexual harassment," sophomore Nia Ross-Howard said.

As stated in the Faculty Handbook, SIUE seeks to maintain an environment for teaching, learning and service that is safe, humane, enlightened, supportive and stimulating.

"I have never personally been sexually harassed," sophomore Treanna Kerney said. "But I know someone who was almost raped because the guy she was with thought she was sending him the wrong signals and became very aggressive and did not know when to stop."

Chancellor David Warner reaffirmed the university's fight against sexual harassment in a campus-wide memo last month. The memo included information on reporting complaints.

The bulletin states that student complaints of sexual harassment should be directed to Rudy Wilson or Liz Tarpey in the office of the assistant provost for cultural and social diversity, Room 3110 in Rendleman Hall.

Employee complaints of sexual harassment should be directed to Pitts in the office of equal opportunity, also in Rendleman Hall.

"The student complaints and employee complaints are separated to decentralize the process," Pitts said. "This way each office will have a unique way to address each complaint."

Confidentiality of all parties involved in a sexual harassment charge will be supported as long as it does not interfere with the university's legal obligation to investigate allegations of misconduct. If claims are brought to the university's attention, the school will take appropriate action, officials said.

Five best campus spots to catch quick 40 winks

BY JIM DALTON
LIFESTYLE STRINGER

You are lounging in the last row of a warm, congested classroom. Outside, the sky is an overcast jumble of dark grays and blues which permit only scattered bits of light to enter the dim room. As the pitter-patter of rain taps on the roof, your eyelids begin to droop and you sink into your desk. Your old, stuffy professor drones on incessantly in a lazy, monotone voice. Slowly, that voice starts to float away and the class fades into a distant, hazy realm. Unable to resist the powers of the sandman, you peacefully lay your head on the desk and enter a world of restful bliss.

Nearly all of us can relate to this. Sometimes, you just need a little nap to get through the day. Personally, I'd like to see a designated campus-wide nap time just like we use to have in kindergarten. Unfortunately, our chancellor doesn't see eye to eye with me on this issue.

The following is a list of the best places to sleep if you happen to be stuck here on campus. Maybe you'll have a better idea of which direction to stagger in the next time your eyes are begging to be shut.

New program at university recognizes outstanding workers

BY TONY WATT
NEWS STRINGER

Outstanding staff and civil service workers are being honored through a new program.

SIUE recently established the Employee Recognition Award, a monthly citation given to an exemplary employee along with a choice of small prizes.

"The administration realized that a lot of work was getting done by dedicated staff who enjoy working for the university," said Shrylene Clark, a training and development specialist with University Personnel Services. "They work extra hours and work late. This is an attempt to give them recognition."

Each month department heads nominate several candidates. A committee gives each nominee points from six different categories and the candidate with the most points wins. The committee is made up of four people who are ineligible for the award. They include Gloria Atkins, chair of the committee and a representative of the vice chancellor's office of administration; Lora Flamm of the vice chancellor's office of student affairs; Rudy Wilson of the vice chancellor's office of the provost and academic affairs; and Keith Nichols of the vice chancellor's office for development and public affairs.

The award is given during the Staff Senate meeting on the first Thursday of every month in the Delyte W. Morris University Center.

The winner of September's Employee Recognition Award is Joyce Toombs, administrative secretary in the Admissions and Records Department. Christa Oxford, assistant vice chancellor for Enrollment Management, nominated Toombs.

"She is absolutely outstanding," said Oxford, who nominated Toombs for her help in coordinating several renovation projects in Admissions and Records. "Thanks to Joyce, the obstructions were minimal and transparent to our users."

Toombs, who has been with the university since 1983, received a plaque and a $25 gift certificate to the University

Center Bookstore

"I am very pleased," Toombs said. "It makes me happy to know that people care and appreciate the work I do."

The Employee Recognition Award was announced in April in a memo from A. G. Monaco, director of Human Affairs

The first award was given in July to Janet Novosad from the Management Department of the School of Business. August's recipient was Michele Albert, purchasing assistant in the Procurement, Storage and Supply Office.

"I know a girl who did not report the incident," Kerney said, "because she felt like people would say it was her fault and she also felt that he was in a higher social status that she was, so she basically felt threatened."

Pitts stated that there have been few reported cases of sexual harassment and students agree. But students also said that there have been very mild incidents on campus.

"At one of the college parties, I felt I was looked upon as a sexual object," said Ross-Howard. "Some of the men I spoke to said things that made me feel uncomfortable, but all I could really do was ignore them."

As stated in the handbook, each member of the university community shares a responsibility to ensure a safe environment free from sexual harassment and is encouraged to interact with colleagues to develop understanding of these responsibilities.

"I attended the University of Illinois last year and they passed out pamphlets and had people talk about what happened when they were faced with sexual harassment situations," sophomore Lisa Allen said. "They also had booths set up to elaborate on the issue of any questions needed to be asked."

Top Five Places to Sleep

1) The Library: The second and third floors of the Lovejoy Library are the ideal sleep spots on campus. There are little "study" areas, though I have yet to see someone actually study here, equipped with cushy chairs and sofas. Because the library is always quiet, your sleep won't be interrupted by any loud or sudden noises.

2) The University Center: Although I've seen students sprawled out on the sofas in the Goshen Lounge, people "in the know" venture upstairs for some shut-eye. The second floor of the University Center is virtually unknown to students. However, one must be careful while attempting to catch a few winks. There's an unwritten rule that this area is reserved for faculty and staff naps only. Don't be surprised if a groggy professor asks you to move aside.

A more well-known sleep station is the Opapi study lounge. Unlike the library, I actually witnessed people studying here. There are plenty of couches and chairs, but they're always littered with trash. Be sure to brush off the crumbs, candy wrappers and soda cans before you lie down.

3) Alumni and Founders Hall Benches: The benches in these buildings lack the softness and all-around comfort of those in the library and UC. Also, sleeping in the buildings can be difficult when large herds of noisy students are marching by. Despite the ripped-up, rock-hard benches and the 200-decibel noise level, many students manage to sleep here. One advantage is the close proximity to your classroom. You can awaken a mere 30 seconds before class, allowing an extra five minutes of invaluable rest.

4) The Fitness Center: The Fitness Center has newly reupholstered furniture. Free of dried soda spills, the benches in the Fitness Center have a clean smell like clothes just out of the drier. In the morning and afternoon, the gym doesn't have the mobs of people like the classroom buildings.

5) Class: I think the university could make a great deal of money if someone would record some professors' lectures and sell them as cures for insomnia. It could be an audio tape series that you play at night when you can't fall asleep. Never again would some unfortunate souls have to endure a sleepless night.

Sleeping in class is best only if used very sparingly. People who sleep in class every day should just stay in bed. However, occasionally nodding off is all right. Chances are that you won't miss anything important.

Muffling screams in the dark

Danielle Belton

It's 3 a.m. You're sleeping peacefully. Your dreams are distorted, but not unpleasant, and you're happy to be asleep. Then suddenly your eyes flash open with fright. They widen as they stare into the darkness of your bedroom. You sit up suddenly and stare at the clock as your heart races with fear. A question that fills your head with impending doom begs the answer, "Did he want us to do questions 11-20 or 1-10 on chapter 4?" Then you want to scream, but don't because you're afraid you'll wake up your roommates.

For me and many other college students, this is an everyday occurrence.

How many times have college students been walking through the quad here at SIUE when suddenly the terrorizing thought of "what on earth am I doing here?" filled their heads. There are obvious answers to the proverbial question: you're here to learn, this is a school. But this is a more philosophical question that the obvious can't answer. When a student is asking him or herself what they are doing here they're asking, what am I really doing with my life, does this have any meaning or purpose, am I just marking time till death. Then the more evil notions plague your mind asking, "Is this a mistake, did I make the right career choice, what if there's no job market for me, what if this really isn't what I'm good at, what am I learning, will I ever use it, will all of this matter if I end up moving back in with my parents and working at McDonald's for the rest of my life."

The fear of failure creeps in the mind of many students. Sooner or later, we're all going to feel lost and desperate. I am no exception. I wake up at 3 a.m. every day filled with that fear. The fear comes when I'm studying, it comes when I eat dinner and when I watch TV. The fear creeps in when I'm talking to friends, or taking a shower. Who knows what triggers it, but it's like an alarm that suddenly goes off blaring, "Quick, do something! You've forgotten something! We're going to fail, hurry, hurry, or we're going to fail!"

I live in the constant shadow of my oldest sister, who went to school to become an electrical engineer, got a job as soon as she graduated and bought a house a year after graduation. Her high school classes motto was, "1991: A Hard Act to Follow." That stays in my mind because my sister is "a hard act to follow." She used to wash dishes without being told. I used to think she wasn't human. And although I knew we weren't competing, I knew as her sister, people would have certain expectations out of me and I, in turn would have even higher expectations about myself. But it could be worse. I could be my little sister and have to live in the shadow of two overachievers and have everyone either expecting the most or the least out of you because of your predecessors.

Lately, all my fears are the same. Either there's some chapter I didn't read, a test I didn't study for, a paper I didn't write or project I haven't started. Often it's like grasping at paper straws in the wind, just when you think you've got a hold, they slip away. It's very nerve racking and this whole feeling of impending doom is wearing me down. But it could be worse.

I could be working at McDonald's. Of course if you ask my journalism teachers, that's probably my future anyway.

Oh, shudder, there's that feeling again.

Letters to the Editor

An Insult to the Workers

This letter is in response to the article in the August 27 Alestle entitled "Workers Hold Informational Picket over Hours, Wages." While I won't claim to be an expert regarding the building workers' negotiations, I can point out a few things that I believe Mr. Neher and all University administrators need to recognize and appreciate regarding the building workers' situation.

Mr. Neher, the Alestle states that you believe that the average building worker receives approximately $11.30 per hour, plus two weeks vacation and free schooling. May I first point out that most(though not all) University employees are entitled to two weeks vacation—this includes you. May I also point out that last time I took classes, my schooling was not completely "free," and that it is my understanding that you too are entitled to the same "free" education as the building workers. Also, I would like to point out that even if your $11.30 figure is correct, assuming that this employee works 40 hours a week for 52 weeks, the average worker is paid $23,504. But, Mr. Neher, let us not forget that you as a University administrator probably earn three or four times more than an average building worker. So, while an average building worker may make $11.30 an hour, get two weeks vacation, and be entitled to "free" schooling, you too receive all these benefits and more.

Let us also consider how a three percent increase would make a world of difference to someone making $20,000 versus your administrator's salary of probably three or four times more. (Have you tried recently to raise a family on approximately $20,000? I'm sure some of the building workers have.) Also, the University fails to recognize that while every year workers may be given a three percent increase, the University also takes away most of that increase by increasing fees for insurance, parking lot stickers, etc. Is most of your three percent increase spent on additional fees that the University or state imposes? Since you're probably making three to four times more than the building workers, probably not.

Finally, I find it an insult that you feel justified in taking advantage of building workers simply because, as the Alestle quotes you as saying, building service workers in St. Louis area only make minimum wage. Even if your facts are correct, shouldn't the University be more progressive? Shouldn't we want to better the conditions for people around us? Or, as a University, do we just want to talk about bettering society in the classrooms and not practice what we preach outside the classroom? Also, if another building worker at a comparable university(e.g., Carbondale) is paid more money for exactly the same job, why shouldn't SIUE building workers be entitled to equity pay? If this equity involved the faculty, I can be almost 100% sure that you wouldn't be making such a fuss over it.

Mr. Neher, please give the building workers the respect they deserve. Do not discuss them in a condescending way. Remember, they are just doing their jobs, like you are trying to do yours, in order to support themselves and their families; however, they are earning a whole heck of a lot less money.

Linda Jaworski-Moiles
English Department

Stop the whining and start the support

Perhaps if people would stop whining about not having a football team at SIUE, they could find time to attend a soccer game or two. Face it, folks, if you do not support a soccer team that won nearly 90% of its matches last fall, it is implausible to think that you would support a gridiron team that would likely lose 90% of its games the first few years.

Most students—including myself—complain about all the student fees. Attendance at SIUE athletic events is FREE—yet virtually nobody shows up! What do you people want?

From Don Ebert to Joe Reiniger to Dafen Snyder, SIUE has sent its best players to both the indoor St. Louis Steamers and St. Louis Ambush. It is a shame that the best soccer Cougars have to wait to be drafted before they can play before more than a few dozen fans.

RANTS & RAVES

■ BY COREY STULCE
LIFESTYLE EDITOR
cstulce@siue.edu

Is there an operation that can be performed by someone like Dr. Mengale, the Nazi angel of Death butcher surgeon, to remove the deep-seated morals in my brain?

You see, I keep getting myself into these awkward sexual situations with friends, and if my morals were scraped from my think-box, I would have no worries, no evil, arousing thoughts to keep me pondering into the late hours.

Yeah, it's a bad habit, but I'm of the belief that one should do whatever feels good, as long as one isn't hurting another person (too deeply) in the process. Of course, if the one I'm hurting is myself, well isn't that all the better. A little sexual torture never scarred anyone too deeply, except for maybe Madonna. (I hear those trenches are dug damn near to China)

So, where should one draw the line between friends and friends who get a little naughty? Is a kiss too much? A deep, wet, tongue-wrestling match? Perhaps a little fingers on flesh? Maybe just a tickle or two? Where should it stop?

Unfortunately, I'm slowly becoming an alcoholic. There's nothing like a night of hard booze, sweaty dancing and waking up half-naked in the bed of a poker buddy to really make you re-examine your lifestyle.

It's not that I feel completely guilty about what's been happening, but I'm starting to run out of people to talk to about these trysts. This has been a problem for me since high school.

Inane Questions by Corey Stulce

TEEN ACTOR JOSEPH MAZZELLO TACKLES HEROISM AND RELIGION IN THE NEW FILM "SIMON BIRCH"

Coming-of-age-stories are becoming old hat for 14-year-old actor Joseph Mazzello. He's played an abused child in "Radio Flyer," a boy with AIDS in "The Cure" and was chased by computerized dinosaurs and almost electrocuted in "Jurassic Park."

In his latest film, "Simon Birch," Mazzello is still coming of age, this time trying to find his identity, as well as helping his diminutive best pal become a miracle.

Mazzello has become a fine dramatic actor, and while puberty may find him a bit awkward, chances are he won't end up like other former child actors.

He carries himself in a mature manner and is willing to admit that a strong and close family background has not let him become too "Hollywood."

How did you force yourself to cry on camera?

Well, I don't really force myself. It just kind of happens. My acting comes from the heart, and my dad once told me to make it real, and I live by that advice. I can do an emotional scene by getting into the character and feeling what he feels. It just comes out.

What do you think makes a hero?

Heroes can be anybody. They save a life or they invent something.

Did you develop an offscreen friendship with co-star Ian Michael Smith?

Yeah, we became like brothers. We did a lot of things together. We played games and things. We shot in a lot of small towns in Canada, so we really only had each other.

Did you find it difficult to ask about his condition? (Smith has Morquio Syndrome, a type of dwarfism.)

I never did. I heard about it from other people. I don't think it was anything we really needed to talk about. I would play with him sometimes and his dad would be around and say, "Joe, be careful."

I heard that you were interested in directing. What was the most important thing you learned about directing from Steven Spielberg?

Actually, a lot of my wanting to be a director came from Richard Donner. That ["Radio Flyer"] was my first big movie where I worked a lot on it, and Richard Donner helped me a lot with the basics. And then on "Jurassic Park," Steven Spielberg would pull me out of class sometimes to show me how he was setting the shots and how everything was going to be set up. He told me about the camera. He was really helpful.

Do you think good roles for young actors are scarce right now?

Around my age they are.

What is your ideal role?

I'm really big into baseball. I've always wanted to do a baseball movie. I would have to co-star with some gorgeous woman.

Do you think you would ever take a role in one of those teen-ager slasher movies that are so popular?

I don't know. Some of those movies are just disgusting.

How do you approach getting into a character after you get the script?

I read it a couple times. And after awhile you put your own input into a character. You think it can be interpreted a couple ways, how would I interpret it.

Do you consider yourself a method actor? Do you get totally into the character?

I'm not a method actor. Not by far. I can go onto the set all cheery and once they said "Action," I got totally into the character. One time Mark Johnson asked me "Where do you go when you do a scene? Where do you go?" And I just said, "I'm right here."

What other actors do you admire?

Well, he's an old actor, but Jimmy Stewart. I like him because, if I could have a career like his, I'd be pretty happy.

Speaking of Jimmy Stewart, I read that you like "It's A Wonderful Life." That's my all-time favorite.

Mine too.

So, what do you like about the movie?

I really believed in all the characters and his struggle to get out because he didn't want to stay in the same town all his life. My favorite line in the movie when Harry says, "To my big brother George, the richest man in town." That just says so much.

Do you think you'd like to go to film school someday?

I don't know how important film school is. I mean, Steven Spielberg never went to film school. But, yeah, I'm thinking of it.

Joseph Mazzello and Ian Michael Smith star in the film "Simon Birch."

News from the foul line

By Todd Spann

Rams

The St. Louis Rams began their season Sunday but nobody really noticed.

MAC

Mark McGwire hits his record-breaking 62nd home run and everybody noticed.

Yankees

Contrary to popular belief, there were other games being played over the weekend and one of those was the New York Yankees clinching a tie for first place in the American League East.

You know it is a good baseball year when a team that might win more games in a single season than any other is receiving less press than the New York Jets.

Homefront

Also contrary to belief, there were SIUE games over the long weekend.

Women's tennis started off the season 2-0 with victories over University of Southern Indiana and Kentucky Wesleyan College.

Women's soccer beats Lindenwood College 1-0 to begin the season.

Volleyball continues to do well with a GLVC victory Tuesday against Indianapolis, to improve to 7-1.

And if you haven't heard Mark McGwire hit his 62nd home run.

Cougars split in shootout

BY BRETT LICATA
SPORTS WRITER

A split in the SIUE Shootout wasn't the desired outcome, but head coach Ed Huneke is impressed with his SIUE men's soccer team as they kicked off the '98 season last weekend.

The Cougars opened the tournament against regional powerhouse Gannon University on Saturday night at Bob Guelker Field.

Gannon capitalized on an SIUE mistake and tournament MVP Asmundur Haraldsson found the back of the net at the 2:54 mark to put his team up 1-0.

As the game wore on into the second half, the SIUE defense kept getting stronger. Seniors Doug Hartmann, Kividi Kikama and Jason Stevens anchored the back line and stalled the Gannon offense.

SIUE flooded the net and had

The men's soccer team split the first two games of the season in the SIUE Shootout over the weekend.

On target with history

Bob Fehringer /Alestle
Mark McGwire hit his record tying 61st home run Monday (below) and the next day broke Roger Maris' record by connecting with No. 62. The Big Mac Land section of Busch Stadium gives McGwire something to hit.

Where were you when ... By Andy Korbesmeyer

For years the question was "Where were you when President Kennedy was shot?" or "Where were you when Dr. King was assassinated?" The question our generation will answer is "Where were you when Mark McGwire hit No. 62?" Some may argue that the lives and therefore the deaths of John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr. changed the lives of a nation and can't be compared to a record of sport.

Sure, in the grand scheme of our national history, JFK and MLK are more important than Mark McGwire; but from a personal standpoint our national pastime has affected me like no other sport. I can remember as a child no more than six years old carrying home a trophy my dad had won at a fast-pitch softball tournament. When I was in grade school my dad was the coach and to this day we still tell stories of when Bobby VanDillen forgot to bring his glove to practice and then wanted to play in the outfield so he wouldn't get his new white shoes dirty.

As I became a teen-ager the everyday light-hearted conversations between my dad and me were hard to come by. I was dealing with new ideas of freedom and independence and my dad was dealing with raising his first boy. Yet, I can remember those awkward silences in the car being broken by the smooth voice of Jack Buck on the radio. It may not have been the most meaningful conversations we ever had, but we could always talk about the game.

My family and I still go to my parish picnic and as the night goes on and the boasting gets louder, you can find my dad and me at the radar-gun speed-pitch booth.

a number of scoring chances, but couldn't put the ball behind the Gannon's goalkeeper. Gannon held on for the 1-0 win to open the tournament.

In Sunday's contest against Mercyhurst College, SIUE once again showed how its defense can shut a team down. The Cougars evened their record at 1-1 with a 1-0 win over Mercyhurst.

Senior Matt Little took care of the offense as he tallied his first goal of the season in the 67th minute.

Goalkeeper Chris Koenig made four saves while picking up the shutout for SIUE.

"Chris played with a lot of confidence and our defenders were like a brick wall," Huneke said. "It was great to get a win against a highly regarded team. I was impressed with our ability to contain Mercyhurst's relentless offensive pressure."

Huneke was surprised to see his young players play so well against a pair of tough teams.

"Cress Maddox, along with a number of our new players, really stepped up for us," Huneke said. "It's nice to see our young guys play so solid considering how competitive this tournament was."

Little, Hartmann and Kikama were named to the all-tournament team as SIUE captured second place in the tournament.

The Cougars will travel to Evansville, Ind., this weekend to compete in the Southern Indiana Tournament where they will face West Virginia Wesleyan College on Friday and the University of Charleston on Saturday.

Huneke said, "I'd like to see us generate more offense this weekend."

As my dad and I have grown older, we have become closer. We made it a point to go out over the past weekend and watch a few of the games. On Tuesday night there was no other place I was going to be than in my basement in front of the television with my dad.

For a little more than an hour we talked about what we would do if we caught the ball, why I flip back and forth between channels so often and laughed about countless other things. But at 8:18 p.m., after an evening of nonstop conversation, Mark McGwire swung his way into baseball immortality and not a word was said in my basement. How fitting. The game that kept us talking all those years had now rendered us speechless. We just sat and stared at the TV neither of us wanting to ruin the moment. It was the best silence my dad and I have ever shared.

Where was I when the record was broken? I'll never forget. Thanks for the memory, Mark.

Bodybuilding championships set to begin next week at Gold's Gym

BY BRIAN ANDERSON
SPORTS WRITER

Dave Adlfinger, a business management senior at SIUE, will be competing in the Gold's Gym St. Louis Bodybuilding Championships at 6 p.m. Saturday at Meramec Community College.

Adlfinger is no newcomer to the sport of bodybuilding. Some of his past accomplishments include the 1997 Caveman middleweight champion, 1998 Caveman middleweight runner-up, 1998 Mr. Midwest runner-up and he made the top five selection for the USA tournament.

After coming off his gratifying runner-up performance at the Midwest Championships, Adlfinger feels he is well prepared for The St. Louis Championships.

"I entered the Midwest Championships at only 80 percent of potential because I was focusing on the St. Louis Championships," Adlfinger said. "I knew competing against the entire Midwest would be difficult, but to my surprise I finished second. I hope that will give me the confidence I need to win the St. Louis championships."

Adlfinger trains at the Vadalabene Center and credits his achievements to the facilities and people at SIUE.

"I thank everyone at the VC for their motivation, knowledge and friendship they have given me over the years."

Tickets for the St. Louis Championships are available at (314) 227-3539.
