Commencement ceremonies to take place in newly remodeled Vadalabene Center

Alestle Staff Report

Approximately 870 students are eligible to graduate as the Fall 2008 semester winds to a close Saturday with SIUE's 94th commencement ceremonies.

According to Chair and Coordinator of Commencement Jean Paterson, more than 500 students will participate in the two commencement ceremonies.

Commencement for the schools of Business, Education and Nursing will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday in the Vadalabene Center gymnasium.

Commencement ceremonies for the College of Arts and Sciences and the School of Engineering will begin at 1 p.m. Saturday in the Vadalabene Center gymnasium.

Political science professor Brian Harward, who received the Teaching Excellence Award this year, will be the distinguished speaker at both ceremonies.

Business administration major Holly Guth is the commencement speaker at the 9 a.m. ceremony, and geography major Andrea Coop is the commencement speaker at the 1 p.m. ceremony.

Paterson said this semester's commencement ceremonies are the first to take place in the newly remodeled Vadalabene Center.

The new, fixed seating will limit the number of audience members at the ceremonies.

"In the past all we had was bleachers, and you could squeeze lots of people into bleachers," Paterson said.

Paterson said the university has asked all graduates to limit their number of guests to six per student.

News can be reached at news@alestlelive.com or 650-3527.

Changing her climate

Geography senior plans to combat the global warming crisis after four years at SIUE

by Neal Gough
Alestle Reporter

Senior geography major Andrea Coop finds the weather fascinating, but she has no plans of giving the five-day forecast on the 5 p.m. news.

She will, however, deliver the commencement address at the College of Arts and Sciences and School of Engineering commencement ceremonies at 1 p.m. Saturday in the Vadalabene Center in front family, friends, professors and mentors.

Coop is a 2005 graduate of Sparta High School who is finishing up her bachelor's degree in geography in three and a half years. Coop's education will not end this semester, however, as she plans to attend graduate school.

Once in graduate school Coop will work for a degree in climatology and hopes to study climate change.

"I first wanted to do meteorology, but I didn't think I would like day-to-day weather," Coop said.

"I find weather interesting, but climatology gives you an overview of why things happen."

Coop said the relationships between people and the environment intrigue her.

"I like to see how climate change affects people and how they adapt to it," she said.

Coop discovered first hand that graduating in less than four years is no easy task, but that she had to "buckle down and get it done."

"There will always be classes you don't like, but every class is what you make of it," Coop said.

Coop chose to attend SIUE for a number of reasons, but the one thing that put her over the edge in her decision was a conversation she had with geography professor Mark Hildebrandt. After speaking with Hildebrandt, Coop said she knew SIUE's geography department was the place for her to hone her skills.

"Andrea is one of the most articulate and driven students I have met in my nine years at SIU," Hildebrandt said.

Preparing for the curtain call

After any major performance, the final thing one must do is take a bow.

From the time I took my seat as a freshman until the last paper written as a senior, my college experience can be compared to a theatrical production.

Every semester was a different scene, and a variety of friends each played a different character. But in my experience, I always had the leading role.

A pivotal scene that occurred half way through my experience was getting hired at the Alestle. Even though conflicts, resolutions, peaks and falls came and went throughout, the plot always remained the same: to graduate.

Before I entered this stage of my life, college seemed intimidating.

However, my stage fright eventually subsided when I learned how to juggle class, work, homework, friends, significant others and sleep all in one day.

Nerves before a final exam weren't as extreme, and realizing that failing a test isn't the end of the world came with time. Life and the production still went on, and the quality of the performance was determined by how hard I kept trying.

Similar to directors, professors taught me the best way to achieve success in the career I chose to pursue. They guided me to become the best I could, based on their experience and knowledge in the field.

During the climax of my performance at the graduation ceremony, I will walk across the final stage of the college production. I will shake the hands of those who helped direct me to become a journalist, and wear a costume of a cap and gown to signify the last time playing this role. Those who supported me will be in the audience cheering for my performance.

My classmates will be alongside me, and each of us, in our own mind, will have the leading role.

As I exit the stage, the curtains that have been raised for four and half years will finally fall.

Graduate's attitude proves valuable in SIUE experience

By Ben McDonald
Alestle Correspondent

Study overseas for a semester, check; obtain an internship in St. Louis, check; be nominated for the commencement speaker at her graduation, check. Senior business administration major Holly Guth has done it all while at SIUE.

Guth said she has tried to do as much as she could while at SIUE, including studying abroad in Holland for a year and taking an internship that led to a full time position at Architectural Millwork as a marketing and sales associate.

"It's funny how you take advantage of those kinds of things," Guth said. "If you had asked me if I was going to be the commencement speaker at graduation I would have laughed."

Guth said her last semester at SIUE has flown by since she is only taking two classes and working full time.

"I took the job and am going to stay on after graduation," Guth said. "It's a small company, and I've learned a lot."

Guth said one of her most influential professors at SIUE has been marketing professor Dr. Ramana Madupalli.

Madupalli said Guth exemplified the two most important characteristics of a good commencement speaker.

"I look for two qualities in a commencement speaker, do they make a good role model for students and are they a good public speaker," Madupalli said.

Madupalli said Guth was a panelist with him for SIUE DAY last fall, which researched where SIUE students spent their money in Edwardsville, in hopes of encouraging the Chamber of Commerce to donate more funds to SIUE.

"(Guth) is not only a hard worker, but also a smart worker," Madupalli said. "She is a role model for students, and she never panics. She is always in control and always believes in herself and her abilities."

Madupalli had Guth in his marketing research class last year, and he continues to help her in preparation for her future by offering advice for her career and graduate school.

Guth is looking forward to graduating and getting experience in the field, but once she passes the Graduate Management Admission Test, she plans on attending graduate school next year to study marketing.

According to the School of Business Dean Gary Giamartino, there could not have been a better pick as the commencement speaker.

"When she graduates, we're going to be proud to have her as an alum," Giamartino said.

Giamartino said Guth's experiences are what made her a good candidate as the commencement speaker for graduation.

"She did things most students aren't really interested in doing. Studying abroad can really help you see the world in a different light because you encounter different people, their views on the world, different customs," Giamartino said.

Guth's experience has taken her far, but it is also her natural talent and personality that pushed her over the top.

"Holly has a maturity that comes through when you meet her and talk with her that didn't really come across in the application," Giamartino said.

Giamartino said Guth was also asked to speak at the donor's banquet for the business school because of her capabilities as an orator.

"She is not only qualified, but also a great public speaker," Giamartino said.

Guth said her time at SIUE has helped her become a well-rounded person.

"It's because of the opportunities at SIUE that I'm more successful as a student, in my job and at life in general," Guth said. "I'm hoping everyone shares that feeling. It's a great school."

Hildebrandt said Coop has a natural desire to succeed.

"She really shares my enthusiasm for weather," Hildebrandt said. "She has a knack for it. She gets it. That's not something you can teach in class."

Coop said Hildebrandt helped her decide to study climatology in graduate school.

Geography professor Gillian Acheson said Coop is the kind of student every professor wants in a class.

Coop said Acheson was one professor who greatly influenced her.

"She was really challenging, but in the way that challenges you to do your best. I took all I could from her," Coop said. "She really pushed me to do good."

Acheson said one quality that makes Coop so successful is her willingness to make corrections until she has her assignment correct.

"She prepares her assignments in advance, gets feedback on them, and then revises them to make them stronger," Acheson said. "I'm sure she will be successful in graduate school. She sets goals and works hard to achieve them."
