Graduating senior finds voice, shares it with peers

PUJA MEHTA

For fall commencement speaker and senior English major Matthew Stoecklin, of Edwardsville, graduation is a time to reflect on the past while looking ahead to the future.

Stoecklin said the goal of his speech is to encourage the audience about a major lesson he learned in his time at SIUE — finding his voice.

“A big thing for me coming here and during my four-year enrollment is finding my voice. I think for most students, especially for those in the College of Arts and Sciences, that’s really important to understand and appreciate because your voice is what you give to the world,” Stoecklin said. “At the end, it’s a call to action for the audience. Even when speaking to people that are significantly older than me, I think it’s a really important thing to keep in mind. Your voice is your own. Cherish it and don’t let anyone try to take it away from you. And it’s never too late to find your voice.”

Not only does Stoecklin plan to inspire spectators with his words, but he will share pieces of his four-year journey at Edwardsville. Stoecklin said being in college transformed him into someone different from who he was in high school.

“I went to high school at a fairly small, local school where I did kind of feel like I was sort of expected to fall into the crowd, or think a certain way,” Stoecklin said. “And getting into classes here, I began to run into professors and fellow students who were like, ‘Okay, I’m going to disagree with you, but you have a well-argued thought, so that’s all I can ask for.’”

Stoecklin said his opinions were listened to and appreciated at SIUE more than he had ever experienced anywhere else.

“I had Advanced Composition with Dr. Matthew S. Johnson. I wrote a paper on video games because that’s a particular area of interest for me. The fact that I got a B on that paper, in a graduate level class, really solidified for me that as long as I can argue this and have support for this, it’s worth saying,” Stoecklin said. “Every opinion is worth respect and I’ve definitely felt that here.”

The fact that his thoughts were so valued brought about Stoecklin’s most memorable experience at SIUE — the support he received throughout his time.

“I’ve received overwhelming support from my professors and my classmates in both my academic and personal life,” Stoecklin said. “I have not met a professor at this university who is unwilling to give a student help if they ask for it.”

Stoecklin said if he could advise current and future students at SIUE about anything, it would be to encourage them to speak their minds, no matter what others think.

“Your thoughts are your own. And you might learn how to craft them, you might learn how to express them in different ways, or you might change your opinions and that’s fine,” Stoecklin said. “As long as it comes from you, that’s all that matters. Don’t let anyone else try to change you. You’re remarkable for who you are.”

With regards to his fellow graduates, Stoecklin said he wanted to thank them for sharing such a major part of their lives with him.

“I’ve received the privilege to see people change in how they think or what their convictions are. I’ve seen people do things that they didn’t think they could do. It’s been remarkable. So thank you for the privilege of witnessing all those events in your lives,” Stoecklin said.

For the near future, Stoecklin is planning to obtain a master’s degree.

“I will be attending graduate school at U of I for a [master’s degree] in library science,” Stoecklin said. “I’m going to try to get a job at a university library.”

Stoecklin said he cherishes his experience at SIUE.

“I appreciate everything that I’ve been able to get out of it, as far as education, and as far as making connections,” Stoecklin said.

Nygard encourages fellow graduates to never stop learning

Graduate Assistant for Educational Leadership Development and Performance Improvement Shanda Nygard, of Fairview Heights, finishes up some work at her desk while preparing to share her experiences and opportunities at SIUE with peers at fall commencement.

Alestle Reporter

Commencement speaker Shanda Nygard, of Fairview Heights, wants to encourage her fellow graduates to push their limits and get out of their comfort zones.

“Thinking outside the box is not for a few creative people but has become the norm for all of us,” Nygard said.

Nygard will be graduating with a master’s degree from the Instructional Technology Program with a focus on Instructional Design and Performance Improvement.

Nygard said she hopes her speech will uplift her fellow classmates.

“Graduating is only the first step to the future and the only people who can limit their potential are themselves,” Nygard said.

Nygard plans to tell the audience how the work she has accomplished at SIUE has opened doors she never would have imagined without pursuing a graduate degree.

Although most of her classes were online, Nygard feels she received the best of both worlds.

Being the Graduate Assistant in the Educational Leadership Department, she was still on campus often and expressed how wonderful her experience here has been.

“I was able to embrace the technology side of my program in my pajamas at home, but I then could get to know my professors, all the faculty members and a lot of the staff when I came to campus,” Nygard said.

Nygard revealed that although everyone at SIUE has been absolutely wonderful, helpful and friendly, her favorite memory is driving onto campus in the fall with all of the leaves changing colors.

In the future, Nygard plans on working as an instructional designer for a university in the Midwest.

“Never procrastinate, and never do only the minimum.”

Nygard said she has already obtained job interviews with the University of Missouri and SIUE. “While I am working as an instructional designer I plan on creating a consulting company with some of my colleagues from my program I have met over the past two years,” Nygard said.

Nygard hopes the campus will continue to grow and see it grow larger with more doctorate programs available to students.

The main characteristic Nygard hopes SIUE will continue is keeping its students focused on their academics.

“I have always felt that SIUE and the faculty were here for me and to help me be successful,” Nygard said.

As for incoming students, Nygard’s most helpful advice would be to work hard.

“These college years can be a lot of fun but don’t forget the real goal, which is to graduate,” Nygard said.

Nygard said her entire time here has changed who she is.

According to Nygard she is a more confident person than she was two years ago.

“I learned that sometimes we do fail but those failures are only learning experiences and an opportunity to grow academically and emotionally,” Nygard said.

Nygard credits a lot of her growth to the faculty at the Instructional Technology Department.

“They have a tendency to push you mentally until you think you have nothing left to give and still ask for more,” Nygard said.

Nygard challenges her fellow graduates to push the boundaries and limits of what they thought was possible.

“Just when you think you have hit a brick wall, just know you can still knock it down one brick at a time,” Nygard said.
